Father Ryan commenced by remarking that he would, in the manner of ladies, who sometimes excused themselves for not singing, anologize for not having lectured at the time first announced. He was unable to do so on account of illness, and had been admonished by his physician to give up preaching and lecturing altogether.

He then read the Scripture account of the trial of Jesus before Pilate, and proceeded to say that he (Pilate) never forgot the low whispers of his answers. They haunted him to the last. He then drew a wird picture of the score between Christ, the meek criminal, and Pilate, the haughty judge. The Kingdom of Christ was not of this world. He came that he might give testimony of the truth. Out of all this came the question, WHAT IS TRUTH!

It was the old question, and the world had never answered it. Men looked up to Heaven, and the blus lips of the sky failed to answer the question. They asked each other, and failed to get an answer. Yet from every generation came the thought that man wants the truth as the earth wants the sun.

Poets wrote about it in clouds, and philosophers tried to find it in human fancies; and all their thoughts and theories upon the subject were concreted in the question of Pilate, "What is truth?" The answer stood before him in the person of Jesus. One year before he was LATIMER & CLEARY, Auctioneers. BY LATIMER & CLEARY,

One year before he was talking to the people; the multitudes were there, and he stepped outside the line of humanity. He knew what they needed—laws, love, light, mercy, truth—and he uttered these memorable words—the words of a mad nan or of a God—"I am truth." Pliate had asked this man, "What is truth!" and the answer stood before him.

The lecturer said he knew there were exceptional minds that thought they could live without truth. But the lives of such men were the

But the lives of such men were the shallowest of the shallow, and minds were the most superficial that thought truth was artificial. It was the old truth, exemplified in Christ as he stood before the world. Truth was not the mere thought or fancy of man, for the merely human could not guide the human. the merely human could not guide the human. Truth was born before us; it was cradled be-fore the earth; it existed long before man, and he could not tear it into shreds, or cut it up to suit himself. It was superior to man, and he could not drag it down any more than he could drag down the stars. The man who antagonizes truth violates the inner laws of his own intellect. Truth, having been born before us, was intolerant.

But there was no such thing as tolera-tion of truth. Two and two cannot make five; light will not coalesce with darkness. THE TRUTH OF CHRIST was intolerant of all error. There was no

"may-be," no "perhaps" in R. What, then, was truth! Not opinion, not sentiment, not fancy; truth was higher, greater, deeper, wider, brighter than all these. It was robed in the glory of God. There were many truths; but anything that is truth is absolutely true.
There were social, political, philosophic, and scientific truths; but the supernatural was above and governed all.
The ointeteenth century was wise in its own

The nineteenth century was wise in its own conceits, and some of its supreme minds, instead of tracing the origin of man to the heart of God, instead of ascending, descend, and of God, instead of ascending, descend, and claim that our great-great-great-grandmothers sprang from oyster shells. Losing sight of the divine origin of man, they place him on an equality with the brute of the field. Why, asked the lecturer, had science so signally failed! If the sailor was not guided by his chart, he could not securely sail; and if man does not lift up his mind to God, he will institably fail, because everything good in humanity was but a reflex of the divine order. In the political order, generations of men often go political order, generations of men often go astray. In our own age we talk of human rights, but we forget human duties. Look at Europe. Of course everything in our own Gov-ernment was good, and we take it for granted, DROPOSALS FOR FRESH BEEF. right. [Applause.] But look over Europe. He would not signalize instances, because they all read the newspapers, and they always told the truth. [Laughter.]. But HOW WAS IT IN EUROPE? UNITED STATES ENGINEER OFFICE,

How was it in Europe? In the political order there was lack of truth; men had compromised, temporized, and seemed to have minds and consciences of Indiarubber. But truth could never compromise. Truth by its essence was inexorable. It was either an eternal "yes" or an eternal "no." What was government? It was a manifestation under various forms of political truth. If governments were controlled by political truth, there would be more or less of human happiness; but if they were guided by error, the people would be the sufferers. Yet high above all these was the supernatural. Truth was a personnility. personality.

By his Church! This was the expression of

By his Church! This was the expression of Christ through all time; and where is Christ!—where are these men!—where is His Church!

The reverend lecturer then alluded to the various denominations of Christians, all claiming to have Christ with them, and inquired how many Christs there were! The world was in a maze of mystery; but the everlastingness of Christ's personality was connected with the everlastingness of the men that were with him when He founded His Church. Find them and you find Christ; find Christ, and you find truth.

The lecturer loved and revered the Bible. But as it was read, see what a variety of re-

In ledurer loved and revered the block.
But as it was read, see what a variety of religious creeds were founded upon it. One minister called one way, another called another way, and it was no wonder that, amid these conflicting interpretations, men were in doubt and groped in INTELLECTUAL ECLIPSES.

But mere opinion was not truth. Elaborating these thoughts, Father Ryan proceeded to say that the man—Christ of Palestine was the Church—Christ of all ages, and that when he was nailed to the cross it was thought by his Church—Christ of all ages, and that when he was nailed to the cross it was thought by his enemies that his name would be but a memory, but they never thought that they had nailed him to the hearts of men forever. This man had broadened out into a Church reaching from the foot of the cross to the end of time. If a Church claim to have Christ, it must possess his powers. His person without his power is nothing. He must be the same always, because truth never changes, and they who claim to represent him must be like him. The lecturer said he was not trying to prove anything. He was only leading his hearers into the path of truth that they might discover other truths. He wanted them to find out the men who exercised the royal powers of Christ, and there they would find the truth. Hore, in this beautiful city—the capital of the greatest republic on earth—he did not know how many churches or how many ministers there were. But he had heard there were various denominations. What a pity there were not more Christs! But from one Calvary there could be but one atonement, and from one Gospel there could be but one religion. Some there were who did not believe in purgatory, which was A HOT PLACE!

who did not believe in purgatory, which was

A HOT PLACE!

Others there were who did not like hell, which was hotter yet; and many there were who did not like any particular form of church government, because they wanted religion served to their tastes just as cooks serve their dinners!

What a pity wrong was not right! But right was right, and wrong was wrong, and both would so continue. It was not for him to say where were the men that Christ came to stay with, but wherever they were, there would be found the truth. These men do not compromise with error. Even in this enlightened nineteenth contury—in which the devil often holds the torch that gives the light—you will find these men living a life true to the truth and true to Christ.

These are known by their lives; institutions are known by their history. Find them and you will find the truth. It can be found by those who are willing to investigate. Next to possessing the truth, it was necessary to be truths of the political, the scientific, and the literary orders, showing that it was the divine idea that gave beauty to all of these. He closed by asking pardon if he had unintentionally said anything to wound the most senaltive of his hearers, and warmly commended the objects of the Young Catholic's Friend Society, for whose bonefit the lecture was delivered, for charity was the crown of truth, and all could gather under its mantle, whatever their differences in creed.
